

Karl Polányi Center for Global Social Studies at Corvinus University and Pál Tomori College: a public discussion on

Eastern and Southeastern Europe in Global Migration Flows: Integration and Dependencies in Historical Perspectives

6:00 p.m., Thursday, March 17, 2015

Location: Corvinus University of Budapest,
13-15 Fővám tér, Budapest 1093 (Sóház),
Lecture Room 3

Moderator:

Emese Baranyi

Karl Polányi Center for Global Social Studies

Speakers:

Irina Molodikova – works at Central European University in Budapest; received her PhD at Moscow State University's Department of Social Geography and MAS European University Center for Peace and Conflict Studies in Austria. She is member of IMISCOE network of experts in migration and Council on Migration research in CIS countries and Baltic States. Since 2007 she has worked as supervisor of Open Society Foundation's Caucasus Initiative.

Topic: Changing patterns of migration in FSU countries: Dependencies and development.

József Böröcz – Professor of Sociology at Rutgers University. His work focuses on historical interplays among global, regional and local forces, with special attention to post-state-socialist capitalisms, global critiques of European statehood and the EU, and legacies of state socialism, empire and coloniality. For more info, please see <http://borocz.net> or <http://rutgers.academia.edu/jborocz>

Topic: Regimes of Remittance Dependency: Trajectories of the Former Soviet Bloc

Attila Melegh - Attila Melegh, sociologist and historian., Associate professor at Corvinus University, Budapest, senior researcher at the Hungarian Central Statistical Office professor at Pal Tomori College as the founder of international studies program. He has taught in the United States, Russia, Georgia and Hungary. He is the current president of the European Network of Global and Universal History, faculty director of Polanyi Center. On publications and projects see <http://www.demografia.hu/en/staff-melegh-attila>

Topic: Developmental patterns and dependencies in migratory movements in South Eastern Europe between 1950 and 2010.

